PO ETICAL.

So still! So still!
The night comes down on vale and hill!
So strangely still, I cannot close
My eyes in sleep! No watchman goes
About the little town to keep
All safe at night. I cannot sleep!

So dark; so dark; Save here and there a flittering spark, The firefly's tiny sump, that makes The dark more dense. My spirit quakes with terrors vague and undefined. I see the hills loom up behind,

So near! So near! There solen a mountains, grand and drear, Their rocky summits! Do they stand Like sentinels to guard the land? Or jailors, force and grim and stery, To shut us in till day return?

I hear a sound—
A chirping faint—low on the ground.
A sparrow's nest is there. I know
The birdlings few three days ago;
Yet still return each night to rest
And aleep in the forsaken nest.

No fear! No fear! Sieep, timid hear! Sleep safely here! A million helpless creatures rest. Securely on Earth's kindly breast! While Night her solemn silence keeps, He wakes to watch who never sleeps.
